Question 04

Read the following text and answer the questions given below. Write your answers in your answer booklet.

In an increasingly competitive global market, a country’s national competitiveness depends greatly on its ability to position itself in the global value chain and compete successfully for a higher share in trade in goods and services, investments and human capital, all of which are crucial for a high growth trajectory. As countries compete in an increasingly challenging and demanding global market, competitiveness of a country has become a central theme of discussion among economists and policymakers, alike, in both advanced and emerging market economies. The World Economic Forum defines the competitiveness of a country as ‘the set of institutions, policies and factors that determine the level of productivity of a country’. Growth models suggest that productivity is the most fundamental factor in determining the level of prosperity of a country and its citizens in the long run.

While the three-decade long internal conflict severally hampered Sri Lanka’s competitiveness, years after the ending of the internal conflict, the economy is still experiencing a stagnant external sector performance and low levels of productivity growth, resulting in the economy not being able to fully exploit its potential. The high growth experienced in the recent past stemmed from non-tradable sectors (mainly construction and real estate), which were primarily driven by public sector consumption and investments that are both unsustainable and inequitable. Although Sri Lanka was one of the most open economies in the Asian region during the late 1970s, the inward-focused restrictive trade policy stance of successive governments has resulted in a traditional exports basket of low value added and labour-intensive products for which Sri Lanka faces stiff competition from other low cost developing countries. The low technology content of Sri Lanka’s exports and the low-skill products exported by the country also result in the underutilization of Sri Lanka’s educated labour force. The strategies adopted by Sri Lanka including the provision of grants, subsidies and tax concessions have not been effective in sustaining the country’s attractiveness as a destination for foreign direct investments (FDI) and exports.

Summarize the following text.

As we all know one of the many sources of income that flows to Sri Lanka is through tourism. The country has a lot to offer the world; the sun and the sea with the beautiful beaches, lush jungles, cool mountain retreats, the world heritage sites such as the ruined cities are just a few of the heart warming and breathtaking sites. However, to further capitalize on tourism, there are a few areas that we must look into.

First, we must expose people from foreign countries to what we can offer. Holding exhibitions overseas and allowing a glimpse into what we have and offering attractive tour packages that would definitely attract tourists here could be one option. The mass media too can play an important role. The Internet, television and newspapers provide an alternative mode of advertising the country to the world. Besides that, newspapers and the TV can be used to show the world the wonders in our country.

On the home ground, multi ethnic cultural shows are presented to woo tourists to the country. People who come from other countries seem to be fascinated by the different cultural and traditional practices we proudly present. However more important is to make certain that facilities in our country, like public transport and accommodation are of a reasonable and respectable standard. This is to ensure a pleasant and memorable stay for our visitors.

Virtual tourism is a trend that will come into being in the near future. It will provide an opportunity for anyone to visit any site seated comfortably at home through digital media. It will be a solution to those who do not like to travel for many hours just to visit a place for a few minutes and see it as if in a dream. Virtual tourism may not be profitable, but it will help everyone around the world to see heritage sites and thus preserve them too.
